

WORD BANK: WHAT'S UNDERNEATH?

When asked about their feelings, most people will usually say they feel: bad, sad, mad, good, or fine. But underneath "good, bad, sad, mad, or fine" are many words that better describe how we feel. Taking the time to slow down and identify what we are really experiencing can help us feel better and can improve our communication and relationships with others.

Once you identify what you're really feeling, it might give you insight into how to ask for what you really need. For example: "I feel mad. But what I'm feeling deep down is offended, humiliated, and powerless. What I need because I feel offended is for you to listen to me explain why and say that you're sorry.""
